

Carmina Burana

General Comments on Pronunciation

Carmina Burana's texts are in two languages:

- Medieval, scholastic/poetic Latin: closer to church Latin, not Italianate, but a little Germanic.
- Middle High German: similar to modern High German, with some notable differences.

Latin Pronunciation

- Vowels are the same 5 pure ones used in modern church Latin:
- When "y" is used as a vowel in a Latin word, we will "Germanize" by making it a little like the umlaut "u" sound (ü).
- Consonants present our biggest problem. Most are the same as in church Latin, which is closer to the poetic medieval than scholastic Latin. Notable consonant rules, exceptions, and examples in alphabetical order:

| Consonant                        | American English Equivalent                                      | Examples   |

German Pronunciation

- Vowels are actually a bit more like modern English. Also, they tend to be phonetic, that is, if two vowels appear together, pronounce them separately (or quickly elide if on the same note).
- Consonants are also much like modern English, so some modern German pronunciation rules don't apply. For instance, "s" is pronounced like modern English "s," and "w" is pronounced like modern English "w." However, some consonants are pronounced as in modern German: "v" = "f," "j" = "y," and "ch" endings in words like "ich" and "mich"
- Pronunciation: Because the Middle High German text is so much shorter than the Latin in Carmina Burana, a word-by-word pronunciation guide follows.
